To any bathroom, small or large, color will lend charm and individuality. In this one, Chinese influences are strong; but effects as happy might be based on styles more familiar. Instead of decorations painted directly on hard plaster, Chinese pattern wallpapers may be used and waterproofed with shellac. The wainscot is painted, the floor linoleum or mastic. The cream-white Crane fixtures are in harmony. The graceful Revere lavatory with integral splashback, of twice-fired vitreous china, matches in color the Corwith bath of porcelain enamel on iron, with outer surfaces molded in four receding planes. The Saneto is quiet.

At any of the 10 Crane Exhibit Rooms, strategically located in the Dominion, architects will find many other suggestions. Let Crane help you plan beautiful, convenient bathrooms.

THE KING'S TASTER

Blessed be the wise men who regulate the comings and goings and likes and dislikes of the foolish hordes who know not what is good for them.

American Zionism has at its head a benevolent monarch whose noble calling it is to control the birth of the entertainment which is being produced at Hollywood for the pleasure of the cinema-seeing citizenry.

Now this kindly despot (his name is Will H. Hays) has waved his royal sceptre and touched with its tip the brow of the exalted Independent Order of the Sons of the Covenant. By this gracious act he lifted it to the higher order of nobility and charged it with a supreme service to the realm of the reels. Henceforth it shall perform the delicate duty of a king's taster. It shall sample for the czar all the dishes which have any pretence to "kashruth," or contain any Jewish ingredients whatsoever. To the emperor's nostrils there shall not come the aroma of any deception whose Judaic ingredients are of doubtful savour.

The Bnai Brith will now appoint a special committee to serve as the exact counterpart of its present anti-Jewish-defamation league. The new league, or committee, will have the very pleasant task of seeing private screenings of all pictures before they are let out into the big, wide world. Any references to Jews or mention of the Semitic designation will be projected on the screens in slow motion so that the tasters may gaze upon them, ponder weightily and determine as to their fitness for the tender eyes of the audiences at large. When this committee will have approved of any pictures, then we will be able to rest assured that such pictures will do nothing but arouse an emotion of love for the Jews in the breasts of the audiences.

We consider it a misfortune that other realms of American industry are under a republican regime. If they were like the domain of the cinema, then it might be that the rulers of all these kingdoms would also employ the Bnai Brith as tasters in their courts. And we, the Jewish consumers, would have reason to feel satisfied that all our interests were well looked after.

We only shudder to think what Emperor Hays would have done if there were not Bnai Brith extant to do the chores for him. Well, perhaps he might have issued an "ukase" to have a Bnai Brith organization formed.

NEW MODELS FOR OLD

When Henry Ford announced that he had discarded all his old views regarding Jews and adopted a new model of views, many skeptics were inclined to doubt his change of heart. Well, now Ford has shown to the world that his penchant for changing did not end with his opinions regarding Jews. He went ahead and scrapped all his old cars and started the motor-market with a new species of vehicle. After this no one will doubt that a man who can revise his theories of cars can also revise his theories regarding Jews. And it was pleasant to observe that Ford is now so inordinately fond of the Jews that he made sure that the Jews would know of the changes in his race by placing the Jewish people with full-page advertisements. The Jews will not be able to refuse to patronize Ford's cars, and Ford will be able to make an enormous profit for them. —A.B.B.

THE MUNITION DEPOT AND THE ARMY

BY RABBI FERDINAND M. ISSERMAN

For every man at the front, six men were required to work at home, to prepare his equipment, to furnish him with clothes, ammunition, food, medicine and the other necessities. Every army must keep in constant touch with its base of supplies. No matter how successful an army may be in the field, it fails when it cannot communicate with its base. What is true of an army is true of a congregation. A congregation is in the front line trench, fighting for the ideals of its faith and striving to build better and finer characters. A congregation must have a source of supplies whence it can draw its spiritual nourishment. It requires a trained leader, trained teachers, educational experts, carefully prepared text-books. No one congregation can develop all these by itself, but groups of congregations can combine to maintain the institutions without which any congregation would prove helpless. Such a union of organizations was formed by Isaac M. Wise, the founder of Liberal Judaism in North America. That union is known as the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

The Union's greatest achievement has been the establishment and maintenance of the Hebrew Union College, the first rabbinical seminary in all the Americas, and to-day one of the leading yeshiboth of the world. Its graduates fill the leading pulpits in the United States and Canada. One is the dean of the Hebrew University and another the head of the Liberal Synagogue in London. Aaron Sapiro, who is responsible for the suspension of the publication of the Dearborn Independent, is among its alumni who have left the rabbinate. The Hebrew Union College, by its splendid service for more than fifty years, has merited the support of all Jews.

Besides the College, the Union maintains a department of synagogue and school extension, through which it brings Judaism to individuals in isolated communities. It also maintains a department of education headed by a great Jewish educator, Dr. Emanuel Gamoran. This department prepares religious school text-books and maps out curricula. It sends out its staff of trained lecturers to visit the various communities to lecture on religious educational methods. To Toronto it sent last year Professor Frantzblau of New York, who lectured to the religious teachers of several synagogues.

The work of the Union is invaluable and every Jew should feel that he wants to do his share to maintain it. Its annual budget of $700,000 must be met by the 271 congregations in its membership. Towards that budget Canada must do its share.

The Jew with vision will not say that his duty is completed when he has paid his synagogue dues. He must provide for the training of his future rabbis. Congregations which want trained rabbis must support the institutions which educate them. We dare not be myopic in our vision. To be so would mean to sound the death-knell of Judaism. Judaism's battle lines are its synagogues. Its base of supplies are its seminaries and yeshiboth. The Jew who wants his faith to endure will sustain its base of supplies. The Union of American Hebrew Congregations is such a base of supplies.

CHANUKAH THOUGHTS

The popular belief held in all ages and lands which needs reconstruction is the opinion that "with the majority rests the right." History teaches the opposite fact. Majorities have nearly always been wrong. This truth one may discover in every department of human endeavour—in religion, government and in science. Liberalism in religion, democracy in government, and new inventions have been brought about by minorities who were persecuted by majorities. Progress has been effected by the self-devotion of the faithful few. The feast of Chanukah commemorates the glorious achievements of a minority—the Hasmonaeen family. The Jew will ever revel in the wondrous story of the brave struggle of Israel's faithful few under the guidance of the Maccabees against the countless hordes of the heathen Syrian invaders. The Maccabean struggle was a fight of religion against heathenism, of ideals against power, might against right. Had the Maccabees failed, one of the monumental disasters in all history would have occurred. Had the Syrians won and Israel lost, the Bible would probably never have found its way to Europe and modern civilization would have been an impossibility. The victory of the Maccabees is one of the most far-reaching events in the history of the world. The feast commemorates the vindication of the faithful few. Each year Chanukah bids us to take on courage and not to lose heart because the truth-seekers form a minority. It points out the glories of the Jew who has succeeded against the power of the many. Kindle the Chanukah tapers in your homes.

"THE FEAR OF LIVING"

A worthwhile book to read is Mr. Henry Bordeaux's novel, "The Fear of Living." Though this novel had been published in 1902 and is not among "the latest best sellers," the book has a message for all of us. Most of us are afraid to live. Most of us possess an

REMEMBER THE CONSTITUTION

During the Christmas season the children of the schools will be asked by Headquarters to help the needy by giving to the needy. We urge the superintendents of all schools to encourage the children to give in the traditional spirit of the Christmas gift practice. There is economic hardship in every place. Many of the schools are closed. What a way to spend all you can for the benefit of the boys and girls of Palestine. To give is better than to receive."

A MODEL OF BREVITY

A Jew opened up a fish store in a new neighbourhood and he had a sign painted on the window which read as follows: "Fresh Fish for Sale Here." A friend of the storekeeper passed by and began to criticize the wording of the sign saying that it was altogether too long.

"The word 'here' is not necessary," he explained. "Of course you sell your fish here, that's taken for granted. The words 'for sale' too, are superfluous. I have been all people get to know just what I am trying to sell."

"Never mind, they can smell that," concluded the neighbour.

Henry Hurwitz, editor of the "Menorah Journal," is sending to English-Jewish editors reprints of his article which appeared in the November issue, asking for their observations on it. This column, giving the gist of the article, in parts verbatim, endorses the views expressed by him in "Not by Bread Alone":

The time is opportune for a reconsideration in America of the entire problem of East European Jewry. The Jews of Poland and Lithuania have been among the abjectest sufferers from the war and the "peace." Settlement on the land is possible in both countries. Vocational training of the youth is essential. Emigration to South America must be directed and increased. If the O.R.T., the J.D.C. and the H.I.A.S. organizations working among Jews in the European countries cannot bring themselves to joint counsel, it will be necessary to institute an impartial conference for general co-ordination. For American concern over the entire problem of East European Jewries must include the safeguarding of the cultural and spiritual life of these people as well as the economic and political aspects of their life. They cannot live on bread alone and above all there should be an end to talk of charity. Co-operation is the correct work, because American Jewry has as much to gain from East European Jewries as it can give, and a great deal more.

For years to come Polish and Lithuanian Jews can only hope to live barely above the subsistence level. They must therefore live richly in the spirit, in ideas. They must have an intellectual and aesthetic life, exercise for their intelligence and talents in order to make their lives bearable and to keep them from moral and spiritual ruin. For them scholars, poets and artists are essential and must be enabled to live and produce to the enrichment of World Israel as well. There is less money for the intellectual workers than for any, nothing to be had from the governments or universities, nothing modern from the struggling yeshivahs, nothing from the general life about them because it is inferior to the Jewish. The Jewish scholars must be given employment so that they may work and live with self-respect. Everything is there but money and in return for a little of that these artists and scholars can produce untold wealth for the benefit of the Jewish people as a whole.

Cultural activity, financed and properly encouraged by American Jewry, could yield up results of priceless value. American Jewry has almost lost its tradition of Jewish learning, most of its creative forces having been dissipated in assimilation. The Jewish spiritual struggle here would be lost without the inexhaustible reservoir of Jewish folk-life in Eastern Europe, and American Jewry must look backward to it for replenishment. There are art monuments to be retrieved from synagogues in tiny villages of Poland, Lithuania, Russia and Galicia, their architecture, mural decorations, wood and brass sculptures, silver and gold vessels, sacred books with drawings and illuminations. In these villages, gravestones and signboards, unknown outside, would enrich Jewish culture and furnish foundation for the work of future Jewish artists. There is a world of knowledge to be explored in the long record of Jewish achievements in Europe in the literature, folklore, art, religion and history of East European Jewries antedating the Middle Ages. Various expeditions should be sent out right now to salvage what remains of music, literature and folk art. Institutes and research expeditions can employ many scholars and writers. Works of artists and writers can be bought and published, little theatres fostered, pictures and sculptures can be bought for museums there and here, and popular libraries can be established and enlarged.

In this work the proud sensitiveness of the East European Jew should be met by a gallant spirit of partnership in the cause of World Israel. American Jewry is in the fortunate position of being able to give help and should do it without condescension. The stricken Jewries should be set up as fast as possible in economic self-support. They should be consulted with and invited to guide in programme and methods. They should be encouraged to conserve their intellectual and spiritual assets, to sustain their scholars, thinkers and artists. In this arrangement American Jewry should understand that in the end it will be indebted to the Jewries of East Europe. Going about the work, American Jewry should not depend upon the propaganda of fund-raising organizations only for its information about conditions abroad. The problems of reconstruction call for mutual counsel and discussion between all groups of Jewries here and abroad. It would be worth the cost to have a group of Jewish scholars and artists from Poland and Lithuania in America, to be paid for their work and living expenses, to be given the opportunity to work and live with American Jewry, to be given the opportunity to work and live with American Jewry, to be given the opportunity to work and live with American Jewry.

would give Americans a truer, more comprehensive picture than they get from starvation propaganda. The European Jews need to be freed from their fear that the disclosure of any one influential American or group may mean the withdrawal of the helping hand. Much Jewish public opinion in Poland and Lithuania feels oppressed and bludgeoned and men there often deny their own words and convictions out of a feeling of responsibility for the welfare of the people.

Of the millions of dollars given to these Jewries for maintenance some thousands must be devoted specifically for the intellectual workers. A judicious expenditure of $50,000 a year would produce great results because the American dollar goes a long way in Poland and Lithuania. A Joint Committee on Cultural Relations, with members from those countries and America and from any other countries, should decide on work and ways. In furtherance of the Menorah Journal, now a monthly magazine, plans for cooperation will be presented, chiefly by Polish and Lithuanian Jewries themselves. This will be a great step forward in the work of American Jewry.

THIRTY years later, she thirty, already married ten years, and she was still less. No frills on Lene. Her brown hair was dull and cut bobbed, her lips pinkish and watersoaked. But into the eyes there occasionally came that gleaming half-crown like the glint of steel, making her look strange and keen, changing her whole attitude into that of a swift, somatic person.

Chester is a small town. People still talked of what a mistake it was for a girl like Lena, who had and had gone to school, to marry Dave Reuben, the carpenter. It seemed so long ago now.

The nights were long for Lena. She rested at her husband's side and tried to fall asleep, but her fatigue slowly ironed itself away and left her wide awake, while deep, distracting gurgle issued from Dave's throat. She gazed her eyes on the fantastic shadows that the maple outdoors threw upon the ceiling and walls of the bedroom. Maples dancing in the moonlight . . . restless maples. Lena squirmed. The moonlit nightgown annoyed her nakedness.

"I put too much starch in the clothes this week," she murmured to herself in the stillness, and tried to adjust herself to the unyielding compact mattress. She glanced at her husband from time to time with a finge of doubt.

Then, her eyes full of moonlight and wilderness, Lena would go back to bed and eventually fall asleep.

Dave in the meanwhile had earned the reputation of being the best carpenter in Chester. When he said, "All right, I'll take the job," some person was at ease and knew the work would be done well.

"Richer people—there's plenty in Canton," Dave laughed frequently. "But I haven't more than Dave Rogers yet, sir!"

Still all his neighbors are whispered among themselves, and even Moore, the barber, said how unfortunate it was for a man to be married ten years and have no children.

"Something always happens to such people," they philosophically concluded. "One thing occurred, except those flashes, at intervals, in Lena Rostova's eyes.

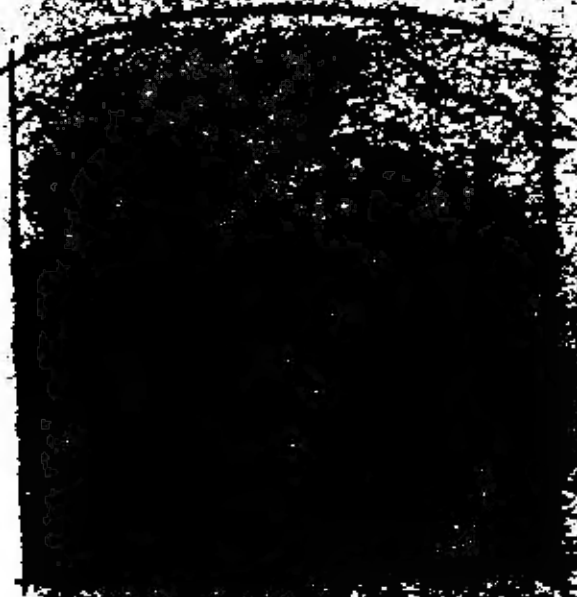

Every morning she rose at six-thirty and prepared Dave's breakfast. Grey six o'clock. Dave had his work done as he ate resolutely. Husband and wife said very little during this meal. Just to break the silence, Lela asked, "Going on tin Murtis to-day?"

Just to pull her eyes away from the dishes decorated with little daisies. Only the night before she had dreamed that was in a high dress hall with flowers all around her when called to dinner.

day's routine like falling stars. Lena studied the corners of the new house to see what they could hold, and stitched curtains of net to throw over the windows like a fine mist—a mist over a heavy ache. Dave thought Tulip Street was a great step forward.

Dave bought all the furniture in Joe Stein's. Anything Joe suggested was satisfactory to Dave. Hadn't they gone to public school together? Lena looked on, feigning indifference, lulling her distaste in deep sighs.

"All new and stylish! Just the thing!" was Joe's reiterated opinion.

Jacquard velour for the living-room, two-toned gumwood in walnut veneer for the dining-room. And a twin-bed suite.

"Keep up with the new things, old boy," roared Joe, and he threw a few rollicking innuendos in with the sale. Lena stood a few steps away contemplating furniture for a child's room. Pale maplewood sprinkled with pastel blossoms. "For the second story back," wished Lena.

"How about some stuff for the spare rooms?" Dave burst in on her reverie.

"We have some nice old things for the middle room," said Lena.

"And what about that second story back?"

Suddenly the room became significant and personal to Lena. She glanced resentfully at the two men. The large-eyed Joe must have no hand in its furnishing. "Let that room go," she said firmly.

"What, empty?" asked Dave. "Yes, empty." To pile dreams into. Blossoming maplewood for children.

Nothing was ever disarranged in the Reubens' house. Lena was meticulous. She often sat in a corner and looked over the tidiness of everything with annoyance. In the living-room the heavily upholstered furniture leaned against the walls like fat women out of breath. Here and there was a vase of artificial flowers—falsely bright. Funereal.

And each night, ensconced in a roofless cave of Jacquard velour, Dave asked Lena, "Isn't this great?"

It was too much trouble to tell him what she thought. Her complaint was terrifyingly full. There seemed no place where she could begin. No loose end to take hold of in unravelling the ball of tangled yarn. She looked out of the window toward the white pillars standing in the night light and her heart beat rapidly for a moment. Then her ear caught the steady ticking of the clock on the mantel and the spell was broken.

Dave was turning the pages of a newspaper with keen interest. "Like winds," thought Lena, listening to the rustling paper. Vague winds of romance beating against white pillars, against the barrenness of Lena. Only Dave's paper was an impenetrable wall that could shut them out.

The Seth Thomas on the mantel sang ten ding-dongs. "I had no idea it was that time," said Dave. "The papers are sure full of auto ads." A new, biting interest. Katz, the high-school teacher owned a car. Dave looked around the room beamingly. So far, so good.

"What's the idea of being so quiet?" asked Dave.

"You're not so talkative yourself," replied Lena.

"I'm thinking, Lena—thinking of buying a car."

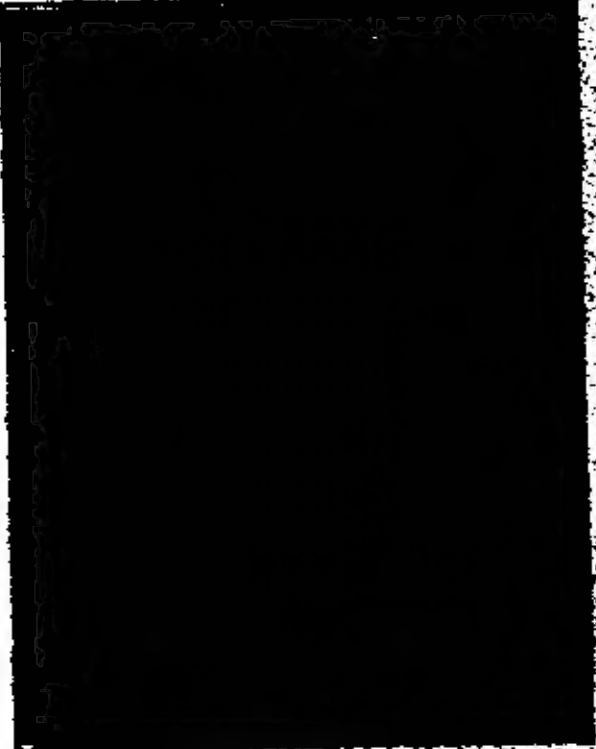

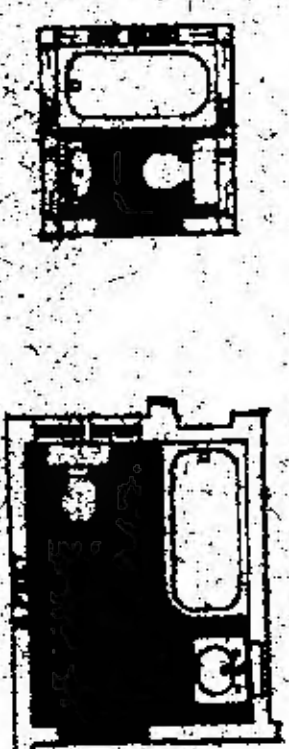

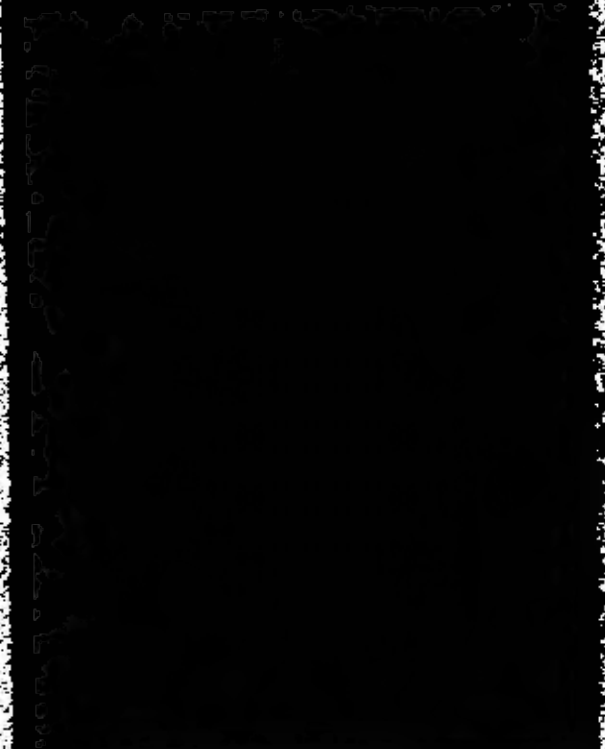

Lena shrugged her shoulders. She, too, was thinking how nice it would be to have a car. The story back another day. The tastes. She had a little money that she had slipped from the weekly budget. She had suddenly become disinterested with the cherubic faces of the calendar children that she had brought up and hung in the empty room.

That night Dave fell asleep actually worrying about what make of car he ought to buy until, in the end, an inevitable river of snores drowned the last of his ponderings. Lena was still awake. A high arc light peeped into the room from the street light like a one-eyed giant. She thought of the maples that used to dance on the walls of their old rooms. But this was Tulip Street. Her thoughts reverted to the second story back. She must save more, save hard. She would take out those pictures of the children. She wanted something exotic, extravagant,

NEW VENTURE BUILDING BEGINS FOR TORONTO

Proposed structure for office and shops on Carrick property, 65 x 90 feet, to be built of concrete and steel. Construction work is to commence January 2, when possession will be obtained by the city council, the council having been given notice to vacate by that date.

The building is to be one of the finest in Canada, embodying several unique features, including the use of a new type of steel. Being a larger structure it will be faced on all sides with a material as well as a desirable location. The building has been located on the site of the former Carrick property, and other firms have been asked to bid for the construction of the building.

The ground floor of the building will be used for the Canadian Bank of Commerce, City Hall, and other offices. The building is to be a landmark in the city, and its construction is expected to be completed by the end of the year. One of the features of the proposed Carrick property has been a lease of the building of the ground floor and part of second floor of the Dominion Building operated by the city council. An Extra Bedroom That Can Be Built, Build, Decorate, Heat and Light

A perfect living room by day without any indications of sleeping accommodations.

Quickly changed into a bedroom by night without moving any furniture. A choice of either twin or double bed installations.

LIVING ROOM can permit sleeping accommodations by day or night. You select for a Murphy Bed at once because of its many fold usefulness.

By day the bed is out of sight and out of the way behind the 3-foot closet door, perfectly concealed.

At night the bed pivots smoothly out as its sliding mechanism is in position with as little effort and attention as it takes to open a well-hung door.

Apartment and hotel owners appreciate the convenience of the Murphy Bed. It helps them take care of more guests and more business. It also saves them the cost of decorating extra rooms for those extra rooms.

Apartment Hotels

Apartment hotels are simply a development of modern economic conditions. Not many years ago every family had its own house with yard and garden and a city block in the residential section of a city would be occupied with a dozen houses giving homes possibly to fifty people.

In planning a modern apartment hotel nothing must be overlooked which will simplify housekeeping or make conditions more attractive to the people desiring the small, efficient apartments. In other words, we must be able to take care of people who have been living in larger apartments and the only way that we can do this is to get double efficiency from every room at our disposal.

We will analyze the modern apartment of two rooms. This apartment will consist of a large living room, dressing room, bathroom, combined breakfast room and kitchenette, and a small porch or balcony. While this two-room apartment does not occupy a large area, it furnishes perfect living accommodations for two people. The bedroom is entirely dignified by the concealed bed which when not in use can be removed from the living room and swung out of the way in the dressing room. This dressing room is large enough to conceal not only the bed but a dresser as well and to furnish adequate room for dressing, hanging clothes, etc.

The dressing room and bed combination is the most important feature, as it has made the small apartment possible. The development of the concealed bed has been very rapid and now can now have a bed of the kind made in the finest style and workmanship and one which will harmonize perfectly with the furnishings of the room.

In the two-room apartment the dining-room has also been developed in a way to take advantage of the space. It consists of a small room with table and seats built in. This room is separated from the kitchenette by a small glass door which extends about five feet across the room.

From the above description it will be seen that the modern apartment of two rooms furnishes all the advantages of a house of

A modern Murphy Bed in a room. The bed is shown in its folded-down position, ready for use.

A new and active building activity is being shown by Neumann Real Estate Limited, which is about to erect a new co-operative apartment house at a cost of $15,000. The building will contain fifty apartments.

The proposed building will be in the heart of the city close to the corner of West and Notre Dame. The grounds will be planted with flowers and shrubs and attractively. The building will be of a red rustic brick with Indiana stone trimmings. In addition to a very spacious main entrance, two secondary entrances will be provided, and separate entrances for trades and service. The building has a well appointed and fully equipped living room and dining room, with decorative finished woodwork and walls of oak wood, highly finished. The bedrooms will have cedar closets with armoire, cedar chest and full-length mirrors. The floors are finished in white enamel with birch-stained steps. The bathroom will have enameled doors with showers, bathtub and mirrored cabinet. The kitchen will be equipped with electrical refrigeration, combination sink and wash tub, ranges and ample cupboard space. There will be incinerators in basement. The windows, of English sliding hang type, fitted with winter sash and summer blinds, ensure ample ventilation in summer and a cosy, warm apartment in winter.

William J. T. Adamson, C.A., will be the auditor for the Commonwealth Apartments, to be erected by Neumann Real Estate, Limited.

A storage building, estimated at $15,000, has just been completed for M. Liverman, at Beaudry Street and Sherbrooke Street. The building, which is of solid brick and stone, covers 91 feet by 34 1/2 feet. It was built by Gersovitch and Rabinovitch, 101 St. Urbain Street, contractors who are now erecting a new building at the corner of Mackay and St. Lawrence for S. Abramson. This building, which will be completed towards the spring, will cost $200,000. There will be nine stores and 18 apartments, the latter to be equipped with electrical refrigeration, incinerators, high-pressure steam, etc.

Another building valued at $15,000 was finished in August by Gersovitch and Rabinovitch for N. Yaphé at 761 St. Catherine East, near Panet. M. E. Cosher is the architect.

Four and five-room apartments were built with modern conveniences, such as fireplaces in living rooms, showers in bath rooms, ironing boards, etc., in the kitchen. A few professional suites were arranged.

A. D. Paltiel is building a five-storey structure of four stores and thirty-two apartments, valued at $400,000, at the corner of Sherbrooke and Wilson Avenue, in Notre Dame de Grace, that will be completed in May. The building, designed by Arthur Vincent, architect, is of stone and brick. The four and five-

The Lancashire Land and Construction Co. completed a $100,000 apartment house at 4775 Sherbrooke Street West, near Grosvenor, in October. The twelve apartments of five rooms each are modern in all respects. Kalvinator System was installed for electrical refrigeration. Silverman Iron Works had charge of the ornamental iron work. This firm of contractors is engaged upon a $130,000 building at Victoria and Sherbrooke Streets, which will be ready in April; and another structure of apartments and stores on Monkland Avenue and Harvard, that will also be ready in the spring.

I. Kaffman, 324 Elm Avenue, is planning an apartment house with three stores to be erected on Gladstone and Dorchester Streets.

Jack Sigman has, of late, confined his interest to old buildings on such streets as Drummond, McKay, etc., which he has converted into modern apartments and stores.

J. Gilletz has erected a garage at the corner of Milton and St. Lawrence Boulevard, for the business of the city. The building is a two-story structure, with a large garage, and is situated on the corner of St. Lawrence and Milton. It is also altering the building of J. C. Roth at 1800 St. Lawrence.

B. Kaplan has just completed a beautiful apartment house, "The Davaar," which is situated on Davaar and St. Pierre Streets, and which is described at length elsewhere in this section. He will shortly commence work on another apartment building at Western and Oliver Avenues, which will contain 25 apartments.

E. Kahen and Nathanson, contractors, are working on three cottages on Robyn Avenue in Westmount, for the owners, L. Hamer and J. Brodwin.

During 1926 the Hadassah hospitals in Palestine cared for 19,041 patients, including 183 non-Jews. During the same period 75,063 patients visited the clinics of the organization, including 4,508 non-Jews. In addition, 35,005 Jewish and 10,411 non-Jewish patients visited the Hadassah clinics in the colonies during 1926.

These apartments, which will be ready for occupation January 1, cost $90,000. The above photograph shows the perfectly modern and fire-proof building, situated in an exclusive part of Outremont. Within this building are thirteen apartments, each one of five very bright and spacious rooms. They are ideal homes and although located far from the roar and tumult of passing traffic, are close to an excellent street car service.

The kitchens of all these apartments are equipped with the most modern conveniences, amongst which the Frigidaire electric refrigeration ranks as an almost indispensable asset. Ironing boards are built in the walls, and ample broom and linen closet space has been allowed.

The bathrooms are beautifully tiled and have built-in bathtubs and showers and very neat and compact dressing rooms.

The sleeping rooms, which are bright and large, will be decorated to the taste of the tenant.

An attractive marble entrance that enhances the beauty of the exterior is equalled in effect by the marble stairways of the interior.

One of the greatest advantages secured by purchasing a Commonwealth apartment is that you are assured in advance as to the desirability of your neighbors. Great discrimination will be exercised in the allotment of these apartments, so that an exclusive atmosphere may be maintained. Another advantage is that the apartments will be well cared for and managed. As the tenants will be the owners of the apartments, there can be no doubt of this. Moving from one rented apartment to another is something like looking for the end of a circle. If the last apartment house was poorly managed, what assistance have you but that the next one may even be worse?

Compare this building and this method of financing with any other project in the real estate field. Take for example the success of co-operative apartments in New York City for the last twenty-five years and their ever-increasing expansion and popularity.

Our booklet describes your opportunity to subscribe as a Commonwealth owner. We would suggest that you do not delay this privilege offered to you, as the accommodation in our apartment building is limited to only fifty. Already many applications are under consideration. Our representative will be pleased to call to give you full details.

The Empress Theatre, which will open early in February, will give excellent vaudeville and moving pictures to the west end of the city. Notre Dame de Grace has long awaited a theatre, and the "Empress," which faces the Park at Girouard and Marcell Avenues, promises to be a really beautiful building. It is being built of light gray stone, very artistically carved.

The new Allen Theatre, Westmount, re-opens on Christmas Day with a splendid holiday programme. The building, which has been completely renovated, will present an unusually attractive appearance. The theatre has been built with a modern, moderate 350 people. The gallery, which is of structural steel and reinforced concrete, is absolutely safe and sound in every respect. New retiring rooms have been equipped for ladies and a comfortable smoking room for men. An arched ceiling, which covers the front entrance is artistically decorated, after the manner of the walls and ceilings throughout.

S. Bierbrier built an apartment house and garages at 139-149 Mount Royal Avenue, that were completed in October. They were designed by M. E. Coshol, architect, who also was in charge of the plans for Papernan's new establishment on St. Urbain Street, which is estimated at $20,000.

The transportation question is another feature of paramount importance. The large apartment house is usually situated in outlying districts as far as to be convenient to playgrounds, churches, schools, etc. At the same time, the buildings must not be too far from business and commercial centers, that is, as far as time is concerned. If the tenant is obliged to spend an hour or so to get to his place of business, the proposition does not look so good to him and he would much prefer a place more convenient.

It is needless to say that the apartment house has become a permanent institution. The nation public is rapidly becoming educated to the fact that it is to their advantage to pay for efficiency and not for the number of rooms an apartment contains. A large building having so many apartments under one roof reduces the operating cost to a minimum and therefore, a well

"HOME AND WHAT IT MEANS"

A SERIES OF ARTICLES BY M. E. COSHOF, B.S.A.E.

Home—a word, nothing more, but O what it implies! Home—that which shelters us, keeps us, or exposes us to the ridicule of our friends, as the case may be. Home—that which men long for, shudder at or cherish. Home—a word used very commonly amongst all classes but in some cases without any understanding of what the word implies. Everywhere around us we find people talking of their Homes and I have often stopped to think of what they possibly might mean. Do they mean a sheltering place or a sanctuary that offers them comfort, happiness and true bliss? Rich furnishings, spacious halls and beautiful grounds do not necessarily make up a real home atmosphere. Since the stone age, when man first found shelter for himself and his mate in caves or holes in the ground, he has continuously strived to better the living conditions of his day. From that time on there has been a gradual revolution in the style, construction and comfort of the home. To-day, more so than ever, we feel the need for greater comfort in the home, for we are living in an age wherein the hustle and bustle of the working day compels us to seek a place of relaxation and retreat. This can only be found in the modern home. Now what is a modern home? There are all classes of homes but the modern home is one in which convenience is an essentiality, since to the modern woman of to-day, who is so occupied socially as well as domestically, convenience therefore becomes a vital factor. These required conveniences are daily being installed everywhere around us both in the homes that have been standing for many years and in those that are being constructed to-day. From the smallest to the largest, in the poorest and the wealthiest homes, the general trend is towards alleviating the daily tasks of the housewife. How is this being accomplished? With the advancement that science has made of late both in the electrical as well as mechanical fields, we have benefited greatly in collecting a series of time-saving devices that go to make up a true home atmosphere. Electrical refrigeration, safe and proper illumination, perfecting heating system and ventilation—all these are necessary towards the perfect home.

During the month of September, 362 immigrants entered Palestine, including 374 Jews. In the same period the number of immigrants was 793, including 465 Jews, of whom 421 were post-war settlers.

The image is characterized by a dense distribution of small, light-colored specks and fibers against a dark background, creating a grainy, almost abstract appearance. The texture is uneven, with some areas appearing slightly brighter than others, suggesting a rough or fibrous material. The overall effect is one of extreme contrast and detail, highlighting the microscopic features of the surface.

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

Margaret Young, radio artist and beautiful stage star, tops five excellent vaudeville acts.

MODIFICATION OF NUMEROUS CLAUSUS CERTAIN

In spite of the agitation carried on by all the reactionary forces in Hungary against the proposed changes in the numerous clauses, the Government is apparently determined to carry that through. The bill for the modification of the law has already been considered by the Council of Ministers. It provides several categories of students who will have preference for admission into the universities. Children of Government officials will belong to the first category, children of war veterans and of army officers will constitute the second category, while children of peasants and small artisans will make up the third class. The opposition in parliament declare the new arrangement as worse even than the old law and are prepared to fight it when it comes up for consideration. In reply to the anti-semitic leader in Parliament, Count Klobenberg declared that the modification of the numerous clauses has become a pressing necessity if Hungary would not bring upon it the ire of the League of Nations. He also declared in a communication to the Vienna "Neue Freie Presse" that no agitation will prevent the fulfilment of the promise made by him and Count Bethlen to abolish the restrictions against the admission of Jewish students to the universities.

Judge David B. Sarason, of Shreveport, Louisiana, who has been on the bench for twelve years (three consecutive terms), has just been unexpectedly nominated to succeed himself.

She knew of every belonging that lay tamely in the darkness of the strong drawers. She knew which suit, which tie or shirt he had worn that day. She stretched herself languidly upon the sofa, storing away, starting emotions as he moved again as she lay there thinking of how she had crested there he was sleeping now. Sad yearnings. Sad fulfillments.

Dave was immersed in his business. He did not notice the tremulous eagerness with which Lena responded to anything concerning their lodger.

Drum was the sort who is very precious to all ladies, but Lena interpreted each noddy as a subtle suggestion. She moved through the house humming snatches of songs.

Irvin came and went, always smiling, always laughing. "Cheer-is, folks," he called to husband and wife alike. He was a clever salesman, probing the psychology of everyone he approached. He sold Dave Reuben pure joy. He talked to him incessantly about automobiles—the gigantic vistas of that trade. About Studebaker cars. About Buick cars in particular. About the massive

"Certainly," she replied. Lena had decided not to throw herself at anyone's head. All the while she was aware of the brightness of his eyes. Her own production at the Buick plant in Flint, its home town, and all about Mr. X, the financial wizard of that corporation who had risen from poverty to riches, and whose daughters had each bought a prince for a husband as nonchalantly as a child in Chester buys a balloon on circus day. Dave Reuben's eyes bulged with wonder. Irvin's twinkled mischievously. All through the winter Dave urged him to repeat the story and tempted Irvin into comic exaggeration.

With Lena Irvin was different. He saw at once that she was sensitive, that she took herself very seriously. On seeing her with a book, he would always ask, "What are you reading now, Mrs. Reuben? Oh, a romance."

He thought it would please her to have a young man like himself smile as if with keen understanding. Sometimes, when that starry look came into her eyes, he felt prompted to tell her about his own love-affair, about his struggles to earn twenty thousand dollars a year to support an exotic orchid like June Stone.

"She would love it," he thought. He even pictured a sympathetic tear on her cheek.

To Lena these trivial marks of interest were poignant, as if the world was turning a new face to her, young and fragrant. She was allowing herself to be blindly washed out further and further on a tide of growing love for this young man.

"But he will never speak first," Lena told herself. "He is too honourable. I am the one who's married and the first sign must come from me."

In spite of her bold fancies Lena was timid.

That week-end Irvin Strauss went to New York. He told June he was looking forward to spring. The subtle tang of moist earth was rising up in the air, reaching even the nostrils of the confined workers in the large factories along the edge of Ches-

Irvin Strauss went to the workers' homes in the evening. He talked to them of winding roads banked with rolling hills and green fields. He never stopped until their eyes grew fretful like a child's whose glance is pasted on a window of intriguing toys. By summer the Stone Company had occasion to wire their congratulations again.

With the approach of hot weather the porches on Tulip Street became alive. Whispers, echoes of laughter and the strumming of ukuleles accompanied by thin, adolescent voices were heard. The second storey back was insufferably hot. Almost every evening Irvin Strauss came down and sat down in a rocker close to Lena. He was wondering, forever wondering how soon he would be able to get out of Chester. The narrow porch was often flooded with moonlight and Lena watched the elongated shadows thrown by the slender white pillars. Her heart beat very fast.

"Please tell me what New York is like," Lena said quietly.

"It's a thrilling city, Mrs. Reuben," Irvin replied, and wanted to add, "and Chester is just a dingy hole." But he could not say it. Lena Reuben looked so lost, so eager with her distended eyes. So he told her about the many things that made New York a whirlpool.

At any moment she expected him to lean closer and say, "Leave all this and come there with me!" She heard it in the tinkling of the ukulele down the street, in the steady creaking of the chairs in which they sat. Irvin Strauss chattered glibly, unknowingly.

All summer it was like that. Hot, impatient days. Dave Reuben's work witting him in a hammering stream of perspiration. Irvin Strauss anxious to go back to New York, and Lena hurrying each day toward the hour when Irvin would appear.

"Let's go for a ride and cool off," urged Dave from his corner once.

"No, thanks," said Irvin. "It's a relief for an automobile salesman to be out of a car."

Dave's discomfort increased, so he left them together, rocking back and forth. Irvin's refusal to go with Dave was interpreted by Lena as a desire to be alone with her. She was full of wild hopes. Their chairs swung like pendulums marking time. Both gazed at the far moon, he with his own clear dream; she with her passionate, bemuddled ones.

"A penny for your thoughts," said Lena.

Irvin's eyes were full of love. "Some day, Mrs. Reuben," he said, tenderly, "I shall tell you my secret."

He had spoken at last! But very vaguely. Still Lena was elated. She would wait.

July waned. Then August and part of September. She determined to be patient until Irvin would speak to her plainly. At that moment, in the room above, he was concluding a letter to Meyer Stone. "Another man could manage easily now, for the office is firmly established," he wrote. "My time is too valuable to stay in this village."

The end of September fell like a cool hand on a hot brow. Irvin paced his office in great excitement. Back to New York! If there were only somebody to hug with delight. Meyer Stone had answered. The letter ended like this: "You are right, Irvin. Your work was to organize Chester booming all over the country, and they need a 'live wire' to take hold of them. June had it out with me, too. She says if you go, she will too, so what can a doting father do but say 'yes.'"

Like a complicated knot falling open of its own accord. Irvin juggled things on his desk. He did a crazy jig. It was impossible to sit still, he was so glad. He commenced to get all in readiness for the new man. He refused to quit until each detail was taken care of. It grew to be six o'clock, then seven and eight. Chester grew dark. "But if I work now, I'll be able to get out of this town to-morrow," Irvin muttered to himself joyously.

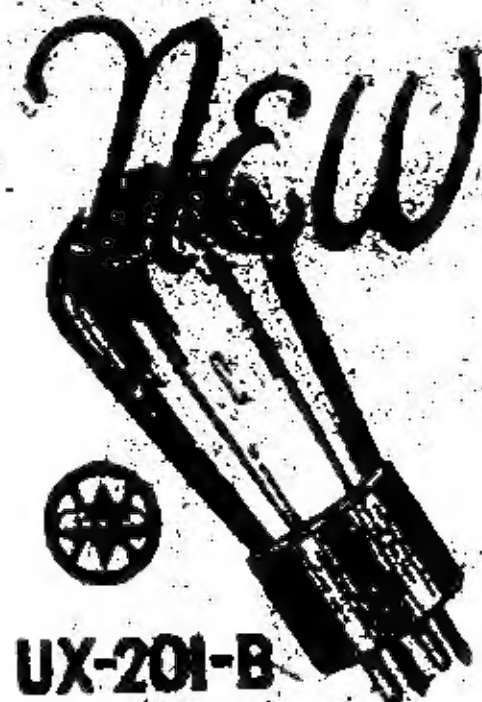

Lena had come out on the porch to wait for him. When eight o'clock struck she felt very uneasy. Dave had just left to go to a union meeting. In the dusk a young girl dressed entirely in white passed by. Lena felt a desire, intense as a stab, to look like that herself. She had one sheer white dress of cheap voile. It was yellowish from many launderings but she hurried into the house happily to put it on. On the porch that Lena could hear muffled strikes of the clock again. Nine. She shivered. At the end of September the nights grow chilly. The other porches on Tulip Street were deserted. Lena felt cold but she could not entertain the thought of putting a worn, dark coat over the white dress.

A moment later the chill was gone. Her fears vanished and a gentle warmth suffused her whole body. The click of firm footsteps sounded on the hard walk.

Irvin was surprised to see her sitting alone, huddled in her chair like a waif seeking shelter. "Why, hello, Mrs. Reuben," he exclaimed, "Aren't you cold sitting out here?"

The lightness, the cheerfulness in his voice, made her suddenly unhappy.

She pushed toward him the empty chair at her side.

"I hate to think that the summer is gone, Irvin," she said after he had taken the proffered seat.

"It's been a very happy summer for me, too, Mrs. Reuben," he answered. Especially now."

"He is going to speak!" thumped her temples.

"I have been here one whole year!" His voice was exultant. Lena's hand moved over and rested on the arm of Irvin's chair. She looked at him, startled and then hastened. She looked at him, startled and then hastened. She looked at him, startled and then hastened.

"Do you remember the secret I once mentioned?" he asked.

Trembling too much to utter a sound, Lena nodded.

"It was a love secret, Mrs. Reuben."

"Irvin!"

He was glad to hear her exclaim with interest. "You are one person who would love her," he continued. "Her name is June Stone, daughter of the man I work for."

And he told her a long story as they sat there because his heart was glad. Lena sat mutely at his side, afraid of the hushed moans that welled up within her and beat against her tight lips, against her chattering teeth. The story ended abruptly. Everything seemed so vast and empty right afterward, that Lena wondered if it had all really transpired. Irvin looked at her and saw a tear upon her cheek. He had predicted that long ago.

"Don't think I'm going to forget you or Dave in a hurry," he prattled on. "Some day I'm going to bring June here. I'd love to show her that second-storey back room." He smacked his knees with great satisfaction.

"Boy! To be getting back to New York! You can't imagine my joy. Good-night, Mrs. Reuben. I'll pack in the morning."

He went in and Lena sagged forward in her chair like one dodging spiteful stones. She was terribly cold. No, terribly warm. To go in too, after him, seemed impossible. . . too painful to hear him overhead. Rather the darkness, the silence and the chill wind.

She looked at him, startled and then hastened. She looked at him, startled and then hastened. She looked at him, startled and then hastened.

"Wanta die?" he asked softly.

"Don't you know it's good to get all these years out to have to wait up for me? And go out nothing on. Shivering like a sick cat."

Sick cat. Irvin Stone went away and Lena lay ill and feverish from the severe cold she had caught from exposure. Despite the doctor's and Dave's entreaties, she insisted on staying on the divan in the second-storey back room.

"You'll be all right, Mrs. Reuben," said the physician. He patted Lena's shoulder gently and his eyes roved over the walls. The room was certainly different from the many others that he was accustomed to go in and out of.

When Lena grew strong again, Dave took her for long drives in the Buick. He drove a little faster because he knew it would please her. During her illness

The Extra Stamina You Need for Winter Driving

Equipping with Gum-Dipped Tires is an investment in extra safety, speed, comfort and economy. That is why thousands of motorists throughout the country use these tires.

On wet, slippery streets and highways—around sharp turns—maneuvering in and out of traffic—stopping suddenly—you can always depend on the powerful Firestone non-skid tread to hold without slip or skid.

Supporting this safety tread is the special Gum-Dipped carcass, built of cords dipped in a rubber solution, which saturates and insulates every fibre of every cord with rubber. This minimizes the friction and heat of high speed service, and strengthens the whole structure of the tire to withstand heavy strains.

No one can foresee the demand you may have to place on your tire equipment in some emergency. But you can prepare now and be sure of a fighting chance in any situation—by having the nearest Firestone Service Dealer apply new Gum-Dipped Tires all around. He will save you money and serve you better.
